pejac_art "STAY ART HOME" In these strange lockdown days, I believe that one of the best therapies to fight anxiety, or boredom, can be creativity. I have always believed as well, that there is an artist inside everyone.

Hard times for street artists because of Covid-19? Maybe it's true for outdoor work, but the creativity of our favourite artists around the world continues to express itself in different forms that have not been explored so far. This is the case of the Spanish artist Pejac, who continues to amaze us even from his studio in the centre of Madrid with his latest work entitled "It can't rain all the time" seems well adapted to these times of social distancing.

The figures, acrylic painted directly on the windows of his studio, seem to rain from the sky, protected by vintage gas masks and well spaced from each other as required by current regulations. Once again Pejac confirms his ability to choose surprising places to position his works, and this could certainly be a message on how we can continue to create, unleashing our imagination beyond all constraints.

We are asking you to follow this tutorial that Pejac posted on his instagram account and do a piece of work inspired by this idea.

 pejac_art Short tutorial about how to do a "stay art home" piece on your window. If you don't have paint at home you can do it cutting pieces of paper, as a collage. Enjoy it! One day less/one piece of art more #stayathomepejac #Pejac

This is Pejac's piece photographed in location.
